

Master Certified Partnering Facilitator (MCPF)

An IPI Certification Program

Program Objectives

The Master Certified Partnering Facilitator (MCPF) program recognizes those professionals who are already established in the profession with an intention to:

- Bring together their expertise, wisdom and lessons-learned;
- Add to the partnering body of knowledge; and
- Create a higher demonstrated standard.

About the CPF Certification

The MCPF Certification recognizes established partnering facilitators based on demonstrated knowledge, performance and success in the profession. Candidates must meet minimum application criteria and be selected by a panel of peers for certification. The certification is valid for a period of four years and continuing education is required for recertification.

Applicant Criteria

Our candidate pool includes established facilitators who actively develop and lead partnering sessions and are committed to the partnering process. The minimum criteria for applicants entering the Program is as follows:

- Facilitation Experience – at least 5 years as a Certified Partnering Facilitator (CPF) or 10 years conducting partnering sessions.
- Partnering Workshops – at least 250 sessions conducted.
- Demonstrated Knowledge – submission of a white paper on lessons-learned or other aspect of Partnering.

The Application/Selection Process

Candidates must submit an application that demonstrates compliance with the minimum criteria, supply or develop the required article/white paper for future publication by IPI, provide two letters of recommendation and pay the application fee. The IPI Board of Review will evaluate applications; interview candidates in person or by phone; and select candidates qualified to receive the MCPF designation.

Program Costs and Benefits

The application fee for the MCPF Program Certification is $1,500. This cost includes the processing fee plus one year of membership in IPI ($600/year). The MCPF designation demonstrates to potential clients that you are a leader in the profession, guarantees publication of your article in the IPI Journal and allows you to participate in IPI's Masters Circle.

About IPI:

Founded in 1996, the International Partnering Institute (IPI) does research on partnering concepts and techniques that develop high trust relationships and organizational cultures for successful construction projects, and provides education and certification in the best practices and lessons-learned.

A non-profit corporation, IPI is funded by revenue from member contributions, seminars and professional certifications. Please call or visit our website for more information on how to join and support partnering in the construction industry.

Our Vision is to change the construction industry . . . one project at a time.
